Monthly Archives: October 2010 Note to all of you Luddites - we LOVE technology. We love it, we use it, we are completely addicted to it. We are the technologically-savvy family, the apple-tapping, blackberry-clicking, social networkers. We live in a technology-driven world, constantly being connected to the world around us via social networks, emails, Skype, IM, etc. How about this time, when your child is not just sitting on their iPad watching the world pass by, while they fill out a form on their smart phone with the next instance of the government, for goodness sakes, in on the social networking/email. We get so much more out of technology than it gives to us. Over the past few years, I have come to understand that technology is a double-edged sword. There are many great things about it. Anything that takes the place of actual human interaction is a step up for the people using it. There are even great apps and online programs that allow us to stay in touch with people we don't see often, or live so far away that we would be lost without technology. But, there are also times when I just don't have time to spend on these devices. When I'm rushing to get dinner on the table or have things to do after the baby is done with nap time, I simply don't have time to do the online thing. At times like that, I wish I could back out and get back in touch with the "real" world. I also wish that I didn't have to look at the device as much as I do. It's become a distraction from the one thing that is important to me. I have always thought of myself as a very social
