The purpose of this study was to better understand the impact of adolescent vocal abuse on the adult quality of life, professional voice use, and quality of care rendered to children and adolescents with voice disorders. We hypothesized that both adolescent vocal abuse and reported early adult voice-related voice disorders would be associated with negative quality of life. Forty participants with a history of adolescent vocal abuse completed a survey battery of validated instruments, including the Vocal Health Index (VHI), Voice-Related Quality of Life questionnaire, and Structured Clinical Interview for DSM-V. Median VHI was 57.0 (range: 0-86.6). Thirty-seven percent of participants met criteria for adult vocal abuse (VHI >50) and reported early adulthood voice-related voice disorder (VHI >18.5). Participants met criteria for adult sexual abuse (VHI = 30.0) or adult verbal abuse (VHI = 26.0), and reported more vocal abuse in adolescence than sexually or physically abusive early adulthood (p Location and
